The President breakfasted early at the residence of Joseph F. Knapp, in company with Scerelary of the Navy Tracy and Mcyor Chapin. After trenkfast several prominent citizens called and shook hands with Prosident Harrison. It was nearly 10 o'clock when the President and his party started out to review the parade. The head of the column was the corner of Bedford and Davison avenues. On the grival of the President, Grand Marshal S. W. Knight gave the order to fall into line. The yarious organisations apneared from the side the order to fall into line. The various series of six questions of them to all organisations appeared from the side streets very rapidly. It was estimated that 20,000 persons were packed on Fort Greene plaza and the intersecting streets as the head of the column passed by.

The G. A. R. men as they passed the President lifted their hats to the man who had been their comrade in arms. Secretary Tracy was on like left of the President, and he too came in for a graceful welcome. The veteran firement and the letter carriers got their share of the day's honors.

The statues of Garfield and other dead leaders in war were tastefully adorned in flowers and bunting and there was a plentiful display of the national colors in all parts of the city. The procession to Arlington was the feature of the day. Several hundred old veterans, many carrying their muskets and others bearing sticks canned with small large were escorted by the District National Guard in the march to the National Cemetery. To those who have for years past observed these coremonies, there was something affecting in the rapidly shrinking line, the whitening hair and halting gait of the old warriors. Nevertheless they made a pretty show as they straitened up in line and marched with a gay assumption of briskness toward the home of the dead.

The Grand Army of the Republic had concentrated its efforts upon Arlington and the ceremonies there were upon a larger scale than elsewhere. Attorney General Miller was the representative of Ithe Administration at that place.

Of the State Fair Association's Spring Meeting.

The success of the second day of the West Virginia State Fair and Exposition Association's spring meeting of 1889 was sadly marred by the rain. The threatenenced, kept the attendance down very materially. As it was there were probably about one thousand people, Canton, Mansfield was to have played Tullamore jail than that of the Viceroy including a number of ladies, who took two at Hamilton and Dayton was to in Dublin Castle, Mr. O'Connor said chances on the weather and were pres ent when the races were called. Had the day been a beautiful one, such as the day been a beautiful one, such as the day before, there would undoubtedly have been a large and paying attendance—probably from the big leagues will be found below.

Capt. McLure Makes a Correction Captain John McLure says the re-porter who had a talk with him Wednes-day evening on the subject of the pro-posed new bridge misunderstood him in only evening on the studget of the proposed new bridge inisunderstood him in one respect, namely, the Cleveland, Lorain & Wheeling Company's projected bridge from the Ohio shore to the Island, The point of crossing of this bridge was from Kirkwood to the Island, not to the foot of Wheeling Island, as stated. Captain McLure says: "I have the plans of said bridge as furnished and made by their chief engineer now in my possession. At that time they seemed anxious to build the bridge."

The Captain says, also, that the reporter misconstrued his remark about the wisdom of the Wheeling & Belmont Bridge Company coming before Council with a proposition for free foot passage. He said, in answer to a query as to whether the present bridge company could not do this, that of course they had a perfect right to do it; that this was the advantage the city could have of competition with two bridges.

Railroad Extension.

The Kanawha Railway, running from Coalfield to Fairfield, standard gauge, is to be extended nine miles further up Cabin creek, to one of the finest gas coal fields in the country. A force of eighty men is now employed on the work. C. D. Langhorne, of Richmond, Va., is the contractor, and will push the work to a speedy completion. speedy completion.

Presiding Judge Hanen ordered that inquiries be made about these books.

Mr. O'Connor repelled as columny the suggestion that the tenants had understood his advice to them to boycott land grabbers as a hint to murder or use violence upon them. He admitted saying that it was not unnatural that a man who saw his family flung into the roadside should shoot the evictor.

Mr. Justin McCarthy, Member of Parliament, was the next witness. He testified to the horror and dismay which the Pheenix Park nurders had caused among the Parnellites.
